BEFORE YOU DIAL

Pre-call state

Studies show the first impression is everything. The Harvard Study of Communications found that humans form a complete first impression in roughly seven seconds — and once it's formed, it takes around seven more positive encounters to undo a bad one. On a cold call you don't get seven more chances. You get one.

Sharp as a tack. Enthusiastic as hell. Expert in your field.

Right before every single dial — regardless of how the day's been, how the last call went, what's going on outside this conversation — you reset. The person on the other end has never spoken to you before. This is the first time they've ever heard your voice, and you have no idea what this conversation could become for them. You could genuinely change something for this family. So you owe them the version of you that's worth listening to.

See yourself as that version. Sharp. Enthusiastic. The expert in the field. Then visualise this lead as the perfect family — they've got the bills, they've got the roof, the partner's ready to listen. The maths stacks up perfectly for them, you're going to help them save so much money, it's going to be great for them. They're going to love what you're saying. They're going to want to book in so badly. You're not picking up the phone wondering if they'll hear you out — you're picking up because you already know this is going to be great for them.

Then — stand up if you can. Standing keeps your posture open, your voice carrying, and forces you to use your body language even though they can't see it — it translates through the phone. If you're sitting, at least lean back, drop your shoulders, slow your breathing down. Get the printed notice into your hand, already looking at it like it's something you're trying to figure out, not selling. Light smile — it carries through your voice. Now dial.

What to have in front of you

The notice — a printed copy of the current [REBATE / GOVERNMENT INITIATIVE / INCENTIVE] in their state or council area. Real document. Shuffle it audibly. Reference page numbers. "Especially on uh page two..." triggers curiosity instantly because they cannot see it.

Warm water (not ice-cold). Sip between calls. Helps your throat stay loose and keeps your delivery clean over a long shift. Cold water tightens the throat.

The paper shuffle is the cold call's version of the prop hand-over on the doors. They hear it, they're not sure what you've got, but it sounds official. Their guard stays down.

Delivery principles

- Speak slowly — slower than feels natural. Match their energy once they start talking.
- Verbal cues are critical on the phone. They can't see you nodding, so they need to hear you listening. Mix it up constantly while they talk: mmhmm, sure, yeah, oh okay, right, ohhh, wow, gotcha, makes sense. Silence reads as disengagement.

- Audible paper shuffle every time you reference the notice — once at the open, once at the prop reveal, once at "page two."
- Never sound excited. Excited = salesperson. Calm = trusted neighbour.
- Smile lightly when you talk — it comes through in the voice, even on a phone.

OPENING

Yeah hey is this... is this [FIRST + LAST NAME]? (curious / confused) (let them confirm)

Oh hey [FIRST NAME] — it's just [NAME] from [COMPANY] (casual) (downplay yourself with "just", smile in voice)... look I can't talk for long, I've actually got another call lined up in a couple of minutes (casual, obvious) — I was wondering uh, can you help me out for a moment? (curious)

(let them respond — "what's this about?" / "sure...?" / "okay" — just continue to execute)

NEIGHBOUR PROOF

Yeah look not sure if you speak to your neighbours much (curious, confused) — I'm just uh, I've actually got the [REBATE NOTICE / INITIATIVE NOTICE] here in front of me for your area there at uh... (shuffle paper audibly) ...looks like [STREET NAME] — and I just finished helping out [NEIGHBOUR FIRST + LAST NAME] a couple blocks over from you the other day. (familiar)

Do... do you know them at all? (curious) They [1–2 SPECIFICS — "run the local pizzeria", "got the white border collie", "just did the big reno on the front of the house"]

(let them answer — known / unknown / unsure, doesn't matter, lightly shrug it off either way)

Weaponise every name you collect. Once you've booked one home in an area or even just gotten a name on a previous call, you use it forever. You're genuinely helping these people, so it's true and completely fine to do this — it builds familiarity in the prospect's mind.

If you have zero names yet, default to: "we just did a couple of installs around the corner on [NEARBY STREET]" — pick a real street they'd recognise.

If they don't know the neighbour: "No stress at all" — casual, keep moving, doesn't matter.

The paper shuffle here is critical. They hear it. They're not sure what you've got but it sounds official. Their guard stays down. Same job the printed sheet does on the doors.

QUESTION

Yeah look — and I called because going through this notice here, especially on page two... (slow down, shuffle paper) I just had a quick question for you. (curious, casual)

You guys are already on solar over there hey, or no? (curious, concerned) (let them talk — verbal cues: mmhmm, sure, ohhh, right, gotcha)

ALIGN WITH CUSTOMER + PROP REVEAL

Yeah totally understand (ACKNOWLEDGE THEIR ANSWER — "yeah no one's on solar around there hey", "ahh okay you looked into it once before, fair enough", etc.) — and just to let you know upfront, I'm not really calling to try and sell you anything today at all. (playful, genuine) (light chuckle)

But there is a genuine reason I gave you a buzz (intrigue, lower tone) — let me explain quickly. (shuffle paper, slow right down)

So there's been a massive [CURRENT REBATE / GOVERNMENT INITIATIVE / INCENTIVE] that's just come out for [STATE / AREA] (intrigue) — and a lot of people are honestly still unaware of it. (surprised, concerned)

It's... it's completely changed how solar works. (certainty, drop tone — deliver this with weight) (pause for half a second after)

THE $0 BILL EXPLANATION

Yeah — what we're doing now is (mystery, intrigue, slow) you can actually put a system on the roof for literally zero cost out of pocket... at all. (certainty) (pause)

And the way it works is pretty simple, here — (casual, reasonable)

We put a big enough system and battery on the roof so it covers your entire electricity bill (certainty) — so your bill ends up at zero. (slow, drop tone)

You'll probably even be sitting a little bit in credit. (casual, confident)

And instead of paying that money to your power company every quarter, you can just redirect it to pay off the system. (reasonable, casual)

Does that concept make sense? (casual, obvious) (let them answer — almost always "yeah okay", "right", "interesting")

Yeah exactly — and you can imagine everyone's doing it because the bills, they just don't stop going up do they? (playful, obvious) (light chuckle)

At least this way... the repayments stay locked in at the same amount every month — and most of the time it's actually less than what you're already paying for power, so it costs you nothing out of pocket. (reasonable, casual)

It's pretty much just like owning your home instead of renting it. (reasonable) You're going from paying a liability to an asset — same money out the door each month, but now it's actually building equity in something that's yours. (casual)

OPTIONAL — DEEPEN THE BUY-IN

Read the room before you qualify. If they're agreeing, asking questions, leaning into the conversation — they're bought in. Move straight to qualify on bill. If they're flat, monosyllabic, or just not really there yet — pull one of the lines below to deepen the buy-in before you ask about their bill.

Don't dump all three. Pick the one that fits the hesitation you're sensing. The framing is always the same: "the reason most families are doing it is..." — social proof, not pitch.

If they seem worried about reliability or mention blackouts:

And honestly, the bigger reason a lot of families are doing it now is — with all the blackouts we've been getting lately, you're completely protected. (reasonable) Lights stay on, fridge keeps running, while everyone else on the street is sitting in the dark. (casual) You're not at the mercy of the grid anymore.

If they're worried about being stuck with it long-term:

And by the way, just so you know — there's no lock-in either. (casual) It's not like you've signed into some 25-year contract or something crazy. (playful) (light chuckle) Plus, it actually adds real value to the property if you ever decide to sell — the next buyer pays much more for a home with solar than without. (casual) Even if your plan changed tomorrow, you're still winning either way. (reasonable)

If they're stuck on the cost / "is this really free":

Honestly — it's pretty much, like I said, owning your home instead of renting it. Or even owning a car instead of leasing it forever. (reasonable) Same kind of shift as when you probably went, back in the day, from renting a place to paying off a mortgage. (casual) Same money out the door each month, but now it's not disappearing into the power companies' pockets every year. (reasonable, smaller at end)

Make sense? (casual, obvious)

*Once they soften — agree, ask a follow-up, sound more engaged — move straight into qualify on bill.
Don't keep going.*

THE TAKEAWAY (QUALIFY ON BILL)

To be honest though, one thing I should mention — you might not even qualify. (concerned, slow — like you're thinking)

What are you... (let it sit, pause — like you're searching for the right way to ask) ...what are you actually getting stung for on power lately? (curious) Like, what's your bill running at roughly per quarter, off the top of your head? (casual) (let them answer — wait, don't fill the silence)

If under ~$X/quarter — honest takeaway

Mmmm (concerned, slight breath)... yeah look, I'll be straight with you — at that level it's actually not really sensible for you to do this. The numbers just don't stack up enough to make it worth your time, between me and you you'd probably end up paying more. (reasonable, genuine)

Do you know anyone — friends, family, neighbours — who's getting smashed on power? (curious) Because they're the ones we could actually help, and we do pay [REFERRAL AMOUNT] for anyone that comes from you, just because we're trying to help out as many families as we can. (genuine, reasonable)

If over ~$X/quarter — they qualify, set up the close

Acknowledge the bill:

- Big / Normal qualifying bill: "Wowwww you're getting smashed. Oh man, I'll for sure get you a specialist to help you out asap." (concerned, trying to help, like something's wrong)
- Small qualifying bill: "Mmmm yeah, that's normally around what we see for families." (casual)

Okay well what most families are doing is, like I said, switching that over so you're not forced to keep paying the bills as we all know they keep going up. (reasonable)

I mean — would you be against us running you through the numbers to even see if it makes complete sense for you? Worst case we spend 20–30 minutes helping you get a bit more clarity on your situation, best case we potentially help you save, pfft, who knows — I mean thousands. (reasonable, playful) (light chuckle at end)

(let them respond — they should agree here. "Yeah sure / okay / sounds good" is your green light.)

If they push back here instead of agreeing, that's an objection — go to objection handling, then return to this point.

Yeah of course no one's opposed to just having a chat (obvious) — works well though as we're already doing a lot of installs in [AREA / LOCATION], so if we're able to speak to more people while we're working through there for the next couple of weeks, it just makes it a lot more affordable for us. (casual, reasonable)

PROMO

[EXPLAIN CURRENT PROMO — keep it light, not over-the-top. Use whatever your company is actually running:]

— We're able to cover the first three months' repayments for everyone we book in this week — so we cover your first bill, you're literally always ahead.

— We're including [BATTERY MONITORING / EXTENDED WARRANTY / SMALL ADD-ON] at no extra cost for installs we book this week.

(casual, almost like an afterthought — never sell hard on the promo)

TRANSITION TO BOOKING

All I've done for your [NEIGHBOUR / NAME FROM EARLIER] is found a better day and time where you and your partner can sit down with one of our specialists for a quick [IN-PERSON / ZOOM] assessment. (casual)

A specialist will look at your roof and your bill, show you exactly how it works for your setup — and after that, it's completely up to you guys. (casual, reasonable)

(listen for the room — if they're sounding open, agreeable, asking questions, you're clear to move into the funnel below)

TWO THINGS BEFORE A SPECIALIST GETS INVOLVED

There are two important things I just need to let you know before I potentially get a specialist to help you guys out... (authoritative / serious)

First — the savings guarantee (need both partners)

The first one is — we're actually one of the only companies in [LOCATION] that will guarantee your savings from solar. So if you went solar with us and you didn't save as much as we showed you, we'd be liable to pay you out the entire difference. (authoritative) As you can imagine, that's a big liability for us — so the only condition is that we need to speak to both you and your partner together. (authoritative, serious)

Second — current promo wrapping up in your area

The other thing is — with [CURRENT PROMO — e.g. three months covered, free battery, etc.] we're almost done with the area. (casual, matter-of-fact) You'd probably be one of the last few we get to. (casual, authoritative)

Don't oversell the scarcity. The framing is matter-of-fact: "you'd probably be one of the last ones we get to" — not "we need to lock you in immediately." Calm beats urgent every time. End on the scarcity beat — no announced transition. The funnel below opens with "should be sweet though... just so I can check," almost muttered to yourself like you're thinking aloud while you check your calendar. Carries the close without ever flagging that a close is happening.

CLOSING FUNNEL — NARROW THE CHOICE EACH STEP

Should be sweet though... (casual) (almost to yourself, slowing down — like you're scanning a calendar on screen) Just so I can check, is early next week or later next week better for you? (casual, curious)

(They pick) Perfect — so you're thinking [WEEKDAY] or [WEEKDAY]?

(They pick) We can do morning, afternoon, or even late evening for the hard workers — when are you free?

(They pick) Beautiful — I've got [DAY] at [TIME] open. How does that sound for you and your [HUSBAND / WIFE / PARTNER]?

(Yes) Perfect — let me just grab your name, email, and a quick pic of your latest power bill texted through if you can. (Sure)

And just to check — you guys don't plan on moving in the next couple of years hey? (casual, obvious)

Assumptive tone throughout. You already know they're going to say yes. Each question narrows the choice — they're picking between options, not deciding whether to book.

REHASH / FINAL CONFIRM

(right before you hang up — the booking trigger fires the confirmation SMS, email and calendar invite within minutes, so the rep is confirming live)

Beautiful — so I've just sent the confirmation through to your phone and email now. (casual)

Did that come through okay? (curious) (wait while they check) We've been having a couple issues lately with bookings not actually coming through properly on our end, so just double check real quick. (casual, reasonable)

Sweet — just pop that into your calendar when you get a sec. (casual) We're pretty smashed at the moment with all the current [FUNDING / INCENTIVE], (obvious) but if anything comes up, no stress — just let us know and we'll work around you. (reasonable, genuine)

And by the way — you'll also get a quick [RESOURCE — testimonial video / info doc / case study / etc.] sent through with all that. (casual) Honestly, probably worth your time to take 5 minutes tonight or before the meeting with [PARTNER NAME IF KNOWN / YOUR PARTNER] to have a flick through. (reasonable) It'll help you just have a more productive convo and get the most out of your time chatting with us. (casual)

(let them confirm — "okay, awesome" / "yeah no worries")

Sweet — and next [DAY] at [TIME], we'll run through everything...

- The rebate / incentive — exactly how much you qualify for, credited straight off the system.
- The payment plan / green loan — how you redirect what you're already spending on power into owning your own system instead of donating it to the power company year after year.
- Your own customised design and savings calculations — based on your roof, your bill, and your power use, so you'll know exactly what your system would look like and what you'd save from day one.

And just so you know — I'll personally put a note down for the [PROMO MENTIONED EARLIER], just to make sure you 100% get it, as I've given you my word. (genuine, sincere)

(final close — pick whichever fits the moment)

If you'll be on the assessment:

Beautiful — speak to you both [DAY]. Have a good one. (friendly)

If you're handing off to a specialist:

Awesome guys — hopefully that helps out. If you need anything, let us know. Have a good one, all the best. (friendly)

Hang up. Good job.

AFTER YOU CALL — BOOKING NOTES

Once the booking is locked in and you've hung up, your job isn't done. Immediately fill out detailed notes on the prospect for the specialist running the assessment. The more context they have walking in, the warmer the conversation and the better the close. This step lifts close rates significantly — don't skip it.

Capture as much as you can across the categories below, even if some sections are partial. The more detail, the better the close.

Who's attending + decision dynamics

- Names of both decision makers
- Availability notes (e.g. partner may be slightly late, after-hours preferred)
- Decision dynamic — both partners aligned? Need both? One leading?

Property + occupants

- Property address
- Number of occupants in the home
- Family setup — kids, ages, etc.
- Owner-occupied confirmed
- Plans to sell? Long-term family home?
- Roof: any shading, type, orientation if they mentioned
- Existing solar / battery — yes / no, if yes any details

Usage + bills

- Quarterly bill amount (~$X)
- Bill drivers — pool, AC, EV, family of X, electric heating, etc.
- Day vs evening usage split if you got it
- Future consumption changes — heat pump, EV, pool, extension, etc.

Customer context + history

- Have they explored solar before? When?
- What stopped them last time (if relevant)
- How educated on solar — clueless / curious / well-researched?
- General disposition — easygoing / cooperative / cautious / skeptical?

Key objections + concerns

- Anything raised on the call (logistical, financial, trust)
- Implicit concerns you picked up on — tone, hesitation, what they didn't say
- Logistical vs emotional resistance

Assessment positioning

- How the assessment was positioned to them (tailored design, savings breakdown, ROI, battery evaluation, etc.)
- Time and format — in-person / Zoom, day, time
- Anything specifically promised — promos, guarantees, etc. (so the specialist honours it)

Sales context for the specialist

- Customer profile rating — ideal / good fit / borderline
- Key opportunities the specialist should lean into (battery case, future load, etc.)
- Approach guidance — soft sell, structured pitch, urgency angles already introduced
- Anything you'd warn the specialist about going in

Anything else for the specialist

Catch-all for context the specialist can use to walk in warm — small details that help build rapport and feel like they already know the family.

- Personal details mentioned (hobbies, sports team, pets, kids' names, etc.)
- Anything notable that came up about the home or surroundings
- Anything that came up in conversation worth flagging
- Anything you'd want to know if you were the one doing the assessment

Add as much detail as possible.

THE 4 MOST COMMON OBJECTIONS

How to use this: Handle the objection, then return to wherever you were in the pitch. Don't try to close from the objection. The objection is a detour, not a new starting point. Resolve it, then pick up the script from where you left off.

Universal principle: Acknowledge → Reframe → Return to pitch. Never argue, never close from a defensive position.

Tone: Casual, low-pressure, "no stress." The vibe is "I'm trying to help, but no skin off my back either way." Cannot sound desperate. Clear, calm, casual.

"Just send me some info / email me a flyer"

Yeah I hear you (casual, reasonable) — and honestly, if I just sent you an email I know exactly what would happen with it. (playful, obvious) (light chuckle) Thing is though, the numbers are different for every house — your roof, your bill, your power use — so an email genuinely can't tell you what you'd actually qualify for. That's why we get a specialist on a quick call to walk you through it properly. (reasonable, casual)

No pressure though. Worst case it's 20 minutes and you've got a bit more clarity on your situation, best case we save you thousands of bucks. Everyone in your area's been doing it — we just helped out [NEIGHBOUR] like I mentioned. Probably wouldn't be the worst use of half an hour, but again completely up to you. (casual)

→ Then return to executing the booking funnel.

"I'm not really interested / we don't need this"

Almost always means I'm not convinced this is worth my time yet. Don't take it at face value.

Yeah totally fair. (casual, no pushback) From what [NEIGHBOUR] told me, the bills around there have been climbing pretty hard — has yours been creeping up too? (curious) (let them answer) What are you getting stung for at the moment, just off the top of your head? (curious)

→ Then return to the qualify-on-bill section. Once they give you a number, you're back on script.

"I need to think about it / talk to my partner"

100% — and that's honestly why we don't make any decisions or anything crazy on the call. (obvious) The walkthrough is literally for both of you to sit down together with a specialist, see the actual numbers for your house, and decide as a household from there. (reasonable, casual) Does that make sense? (curious)

→ Then return to the closing funnel — you're actually selling them on why the walkthrough exists with this objection, so it leads naturally back into booking.

"We can't afford it right now"

Oh yeah of course (genuine, no pressure) — and honestly that's the most common reason I hear, which is exactly why I'm telling you this doesn't cost anything upfront. (casual, reasonable) As long as you qualify, the repayments normally end up less than what you're already paying for power. So it's literally designed to help you out, not be another bill on top. (reasonable) Make sense? (curious)

→ Then return to either the takeaway / qualify section or straight into the closing funnel depending on where you were.
