BEFORE YOU KNOCK

Pre-knock state

Studies show the first impression is everything. The Harvard Study of Communications found that humans form a complete first impression in roughly seven seconds — and once it's formed, it takes around seven more positive encounters to undo a bad one. You're not getting seven more chances at this door. You get one.

Sharp as a tack. Enthusiastic as hell. Expert in your field.

Right before every single knock — regardless of how the day's been, how the last door went, what's going on outside this conversation — you reset. The person on the other side has never met you. This is the first time they've ever spoken to you, and you have no idea what this conversation could become for them. You could genuinely change something for this family. So you owe them the version of you that's worth meeting.

See yourself as that version. Sharp. Enthusiastic. The expert in the field. Then visualise this family — visualise them as the perfect family. The maths stacks up perfectly for them, you're going to help them save so much money, it's going to be great for them. They're going to love what you're saying. They're going to want to book in so badly. You're not turning up wondering if they'll buy — you're turning up because you already know this is going to be great for them.

Then — take a deep breath. Drop your shoulders. Slow your breathing down. Get the prop into your hand, already looking at it like it's something you're trying to figure out, not selling. Body angled slightly off the door, not square-on. Light smile, not a grin. Now knock.

What to carry

Must-have: a two-sided printed info sheet. This is the centrepiece of the whole pitch. A single printed sheet, two sides:

- Front (the notice): clean info about the current initiative / rebate. Company logo, the program name, a couple of lines about what's available. This is what they see when you hand it over initially.
- Back (the $0 bill): a mockup of a power bill showing $0 owing or "in credit." You will flip to this during the body.

Delivery principles

- Speak slowly — calm and confident, match their energy.
- Use natural icebreakers where there's an opening (the dog, garden, the car, the renovation, etc.).
- Verbal cues while they talk: mmhmm, sure, okay, right, ohhh, wow.
- Never sound excited. Excited = salesperson. Calm = trusted neighbour.

OPENER

(Looking at paper / sheet in your hands perplexed, lean in, body on side angle.)

Hey are you guys the... homeowners here? (curious / confused)

Okay well... I can't stay long, I've just got an appointment in a couple of minutes literally just down the road (casual, obvious) but I was wondering if uh quickly... you could help me out (curious) — I'm [NAME] from [COMPANY] by the way (casual) (hand on heart, slight lean in, nod, light smile, then open palms up)

NEIGHBOUR PROOF

Not sure if you speak to your neighbours much (curious, confused) — I just finished helping out [NEIGHBOUR FIRST + LAST NAME] a couple blocks over / wherever they are. (familiar) (point at direction of neighbours house)

Do... do you know them? (curious) [1–2 SPECIFICS] — "they run the local pizzeria", "their little border collie's always tearing down the street."

Plug in actual local neighbours wherever possible. Once you've booked in / gotten 1 person's name on doors (shouldn't be hard if you ask for a name even if they don't book) you immediately use it to your benefit. You're helping everybody you speak to so this is completely true.

If you genuinely don't have a name at the start of your session, default to: "we just did a couple of installs around the corner on [STREET]" — pick a nearby street they would likely know.

Now either they know the neighbour (great), or they don't — which you casually shrug off like it doesn't matter and continue. E.g. "No stress at all."

ICEBREAKER

(Use a natural icebreaker if there's an opening — dog, garden, car, renovation, kids' bikes on the lawn, etc.)

This is the beat where the prospect's guard properly drops. They're not being pitched — they're having a chat with someone who noticed something about their place. Don't force it. If there's nothing obvious, skip it and move to the question. If there is, take the ten seconds — it's worth more than any line later in the script.

QUESTION

Well hey... I was looking at your roof — just curious, how come you guys haven't got solar yet? (curious, concerned) (let them talk and verbal cue here: mmhmm, sure, okay, right, ohhh, wow, etc.)

ALIGN WITH CUSTOMER + PROP HAND-OVER

Yeah totally understand (ACKNOWLEDGE THEIR ANSWER), and just to let you know upfront... I'm not here to sell you anything today at all. (playful, genuine) (light chuckle)

But there is a genuine reason I'm here (intrigue), I'll show you. (Lean in, hand them the sheet / resource in your hands)

(prop already in their hands — notice side showing)

There's been a massive [CURRENT REBATE / GOVERNMENT INITIATIVE / INCENTIVE — whatever's relevant right now in LOCATION] that's just come out (intrigue) — and a lot of people are actually still unaware of it. (surprised, concerned)

It's completely... changed how solar works. (certainty, intrigue) (look at them seriously, use body language, deliver this with impact)

Yeah — what we're doing now is (mystery, intrigue), you can actually put a system on the roof for literally 0 cost out of pocket... at all. (certainty)

And the way it works is pretty simple, here... (casual, reasonable) (flip the sheet in their hands to the $0 bill side)

(now they're looking at the $0 bill)

We put a big enough system and battery on the roof so it covers your entire electricity bill (certainty) — so your bill ends up looking like that. (casual) (point with finger)

You'll probably... be in a little bit of credit as you can see here. (casual) (point more specifically with finger)

And instead of paying that money to your power company every quarter, you can just redirect it to pay off the system. (reasonable) (body language in unison, throw hands up insinuating "it's really that simple")

Does that concept make sense? (casual, obvious)

Yeah exactly — and you can imagine everyone's doing it because the bills, they just don't stop going up do they. (playful, obvious) (light chuckle)

At least this way... the repayments stay locked in at the same amount every month — and most of the time it's actually less than what you're already paying for power, so it costs you nothing out of pocket. (reasonable, casual) (use body language here)

It's pretty much just like owning your home instead of renting it. (reasonable) You're going from paying a liability to an asset — same money out the door each month, but now it's actually building equity in something that's yours. (casual)

OPTIONAL — DEEPEN THE BUY-IN

Read the room before you qualify. If they're nodding, asking questions, leaning in — they're bought in. Move straight to qualify on bill. If they're stiff, monosyllabic, arms crossed, or just not really there yet — pull one of the lines below to deepen the buy-in before you ask about their bill.

Don't dump all three. Pick the one that fits the hesitation you're sensing. The framing is always the same: "the reason most families are doing it is..." — social proof, not pitch.

If they seem worried about reliability or mention blackouts:

And honestly, the bigger reason a lot of families are doing it now is — with all the blackouts we've been getting lately, you're completely protected. (reasonable) Lights stay on, fridge keeps running, while everyone else on the street is sitting in the dark. (casual) You're not at the mercy of the grid anymore.

If they're worried about being stuck with it long-term:

And by the way, just so you know — there's no lock-in either. (casual) It's not like you've signed into some 25-year contract or something crazy. (playful) (light chuckle) Plus, it actually adds real value to the property if you ever decide to sell — the next buyer pays much more for a home with solar than without. (casual)

Even if your plan changed tomorrow, you're still winning either way. (reasonable)

If they're stuck on the cost / "is this really free":

Honestly — it's pretty much, like I said, owning your home instead of renting it. Or even owning a car instead of leasing it forever. (reasonable) Same kind of shift as when you probably went, back in the day, from renting a place to paying off a mortgage. (casual) Same money out the door each month, but now it's not disappearing into the power companies' pockets every year. (reasonable, smaller at end)

Make sense? (casual, obvious) (look at them, hands up palms out — like "why would you not do it", obvious gesture)

Once they soften — nod, ask a follow-up, lean in — move straight into qualify on bill. Don't keep going.

QUALIFY ON BILL

To be honest though, one thing I should mention... you might not even qualify... (concerned) (look like you're thinking deeply)

What are you... (let it sit, pause — like you're searching for the right way to ask) ...what are you actually getting stung for on power lately? (curious) Like, what's your bill running at roughly per quarter, off the top of your head? (casual)

If under ~${X}/quarter — honest takeaway

Mmmm (concerned) (nod, take breath), yeah look... I'll be straight with you — at that level it's actually not really sensible for you to do this. The numbers just don't stack up enough to make it worth your time, between me and you you'll probably end up paying more. (reasonable, genuine)

Do you know anyone — friends, family, neighbours — who's getting smashed on power? (curious) Because they're the ones we could actually help, and we do pay [REFERRAL AMOUNT] for anyone that comes from you, just because we're trying to help out as many families as we can. (genuine, reasonable)

If over ~${X}/quarter — they qualify, set up the close

Acknowledge:

— Big / Normal qualifying bill: "Wowwww you're getting smashed. Oh man, I'll for sure get you a specialist to help you out asap." (concerned, trying to help, like something's wrong)

— Small qualifying bill: "Mmmm yeah, that's normally around what we see for families." (casual)

Okay well what most families are doing is, like I said, switching that over so you're not forced to pay the bills as we all know they keep going up. (reasonable) (body language on "switching")

I mean, would you be against us running you through the numbers to even see if it makes complete sense for you? Worst case we spend 20–30 minutes helping you get a bit more clarity on your situation, best case we can potentially help you save, pfft, who knows I mean thousands. (reasonable, playful) (light chuckle at end)

(let them respond — they should agree here. "Yeah sure / okay / sounds good" is your green light.)

If they push back here instead of agreeing, that's an objection — go to objection handling, then return to this point.

Yeah of course no one's opposed to just having a chat (obvious), works well though as we're already doing a lot of installs in the area, so if we're able to speak to more people while we're here for the next couple of weeks, it just makes it a lot more affordable for us. (casual, reasonable)

PROMO

[EXPLAIN CURRENT PROMO — keep it light, not over-the-top. Use whatever your company is actually running:]

- We're able to cover the first three months' repayments for everyone we book in this week — so we cover your first bill, you're literally always ahead.
- We're including [BATTERY MONITORING / EXTENDED WARRANTY / SMALL ADD-ON] at no extra cost for installs we book this week.

TRANSITION TO BOOKING

All I've done for your [NEIGHBOURS / NAME OF NEIGHBOUR MENTIONED AT START] is found a better day and time where you and your partner can sit down for an [IN-PERSON / ZOOM] assessment. (casual)

A specialist / I will look at your roof and your bill, show you how it works — and after that, it's completely up to you guys. (casual, reasonable)

(read the room here — if they're accepting, not pushing back, you're clear to move into the funnel. Now look down at your phone like you're casually checking your calendar for free times.)

TWO THINGS BEFORE A SPECIALIST GETS INVOLVED

There are two important things I just need to let you know before I potentially get a specialist to help you guys out... (authoritative / serious)

First — the savings guarantee (need both partners)

The first one is... we're one of the only companies in [LOCATION] that will guarantee your savings from solar. So if you went solar with us and you didn't save as much as we showed you, we'd be liable to pay you out the entire difference. As you can imagine, that's a big liability for us — so the only condition is that we need to speak to both you and your partner together at the [IN-PERSON / ZOOM] walkthrough. (authoritative / serious)

Second — current promo wrapping up in your area

The other thing is — with [CURRENT PROMO — e.g. three months covered, free battery, etc.] we're almost done with the area. (casual, matter-of-fact) You'd probably be one of the last few we get to. (casual, authoritative)

Don't oversell the scarcity. The framing is matter-of-fact: "you'd probably be one of the last ones we get to" — not "we need to lock you in immediately." Calm beats urgent every time. End on the scarcity beat — no announced transition. The funnel below opens with "should be sweet though... just so I can check," almost muttered to yourself as you glance at your phone. Carries the close without ever flagging that a close is happening.

CLOSING FUNNEL — NARROW THE CHOICE EACH STEP

Should be sweet though... (casual) (almost to yourself — eyes drop to phone, no big nod) Just so I can check, is early next week or later next week better for you? (casual, curious) (still scanning your calendar)

(They pick) Perfect — so you're thinking [WEEKDAY] or [WEEKDAY]?

(They pick) We can do morning, afternoon, or even late evening for the hard workers — when are you free?

(They pick) Beautiful — I've got [DAY] at [TIME] open. How does that sound for you and your [HUSBAND / WIFE / PARTNER]?

(Yes) Perfect — let me just grab your name, number, email, quick pic of bill (Sure)

And just to check you guys don't plan on moving in the next couple years hey?

Assumptive tone throughout. You already know they're going to say yes. Each question narrows the choice — they're picking between options, not deciding whether to book.

REHASH / FINAL CONFIRM

(use right before they walk away — the booking trigger fires the confirmation SMS, email and calendar invite within minutes, so the rep is confirming live)

Beautiful — so I've just sent the confirmation through to your phone and email now. (casual)

Did that come through okay? (curious) (wait while they check their phone) We've been having a couple issues lately with bookings not actually coming through properly on our end, so just double check real quick. (casual, reasonable)

Sweet — just pop that into your calendar when you get a sec. (casual) We're pretty smashed at the moment with all the current [FUNDING / INCENTIVE], (obvious) but if anything comes up, no stress — just let us know and we'll work around you. (reasonable, genuine)

And by the way — you'll also get a quick [RESOURCE — testimonial video / info doc / case study / etc.] sent through with all that. (casual) Honestly, probably worth your time to take 5 minutes tonight or before the meeting with [PARTNER NAME IF KNOWN / YOUR PARTNER] to have a flick through. (reasonable) It'll help you just have a more productive convo and get the most out of your time chatting with us. (casual)

(let them confirm — "okay, awesome" / "yeah no worries")

Sweet — and next [DAY] at [TIME], we'll run through everything...

- The rebate / incentive — exactly how much you qualify for, credited straight off the system.
- The payment plan / green loan — how you redirect what you're already spending on power into owning your own system instead of donating it to the power company year after year.
- Your own customised design and savings calculations — based on your roof, your bill, and your power use, so you'll know exactly what your system would look like and what you'd save from day one.

And just so you know — I'll personally put a note down for the [PROMO MENTIONED EARLIER], just to make sure you 100% get it, as I've given you my word. (genuine, sincere)

(final close — pick whichever fits the moment)

If you'll be on the assessment:

Sweet — speak to you both [DAY]. Have a good one. (friendly)

If you're handing off to a specialist:

Awesome guys — hopefully that helps out. If you need anything, let us know. Have a good one, all the best. (friendly)

Close conversation, good job.

AFTER YOU CLOSE — BOOKING NOTES

Once the booking is locked in and you've walked away from the door, your job isn't done. Immediately fill out detailed notes on the prospect for the specialist running the assessment. The more context they have walking in, the warmer the conversation and the better the close. This step lifts close rates significantly — don't skip it.

Capture as much as you can across the categories below, even if some sections are partial. The more detail, the better the close.

Who's attending + decision dynamics

- Names of both decision makers
- Availability notes (e.g. partner may be slightly late, after-hours preferred)
- Decision dynamic — both partners aligned? Need both? One leading?

Property + occupants

- Property address
- Number of occupants in the home
- Family setup — kids, ages, etc.
- Owner-occupied confirmed (always — qualified at the door)
- Plans to sell? Long-term family home?
- Roof: any visible shading, type, orientation if you could see it
- Existing solar / battery — yes / no, if yes any details

Usage + bills

- Quarterly bill amount (~$X)
- Bill drivers — pool, AC, EV, family of X, electric heating, etc.
- Day vs evening usage split if you got it
- Future consumption changes — heat pump, EV, pool, extension, etc.

Customer context + history

- Have they explored solar before? When?
- What stopped them last time (if relevant)
- How educated on solar — clueless / curious / well-researched?
- General disposition — easygoing / cooperative / cautious / skeptical?

Key objections + concerns

- Anything raised at the door (logistical, financial, trust)
- Implicit concerns you picked up on — body language, hesitation, what they didn't say
- Logistical vs emotional resistance

Assessment positioning

- How the assessment was positioned to them (tailored design, savings breakdown, ROI, battery evaluation, etc.)
- Time and format — in-person / Zoom, day, time
- Anything specifically promised — promos, guarantees, etc. (so the specialist honours it)

Sales context for the specialist

- Customer profile rating — ideal / good fit / borderline
- Key opportunities the specialist should lean into (battery case, future load, etc.)
- Approach guidance — soft sell, structured pitch, urgency angles already introduced
- Anything you'd warn the specialist about going in

Anything else for the specialist

Catch-all for context the specialist can use to walk in warm — small details that help build rapport and feel like they already know the family.

- Personal details mentioned (hobbies, sports team, pets, kids' names, etc.)
- Anything notable about the home or surroundings (pool, vehicles, recent reno, etc.)
- Anything that came up in conversation worth flagging
- Anything you'd want to know if you were the one doing the assessment

Add as much detail as possible.

THE 4 MOST COMMON OBJECTIONS

How to use this: Handle the objection, then return to wherever you were in the pitch. Don't try to close from the objection. The objection is a detour, not a new starting point. Resolve it, then pick up the script from where you left off and execute on the process.

Universal principle: Acknowledge → Reframe → Return to pitch. Never argue, never close from a defensive position.

Tone: Casual, low-pressure, "no stress." The vibe is "I'm trying to help, but no skin off my back either way." Cannot sound desperate — biggest thing is being clear, calm and again CASUAL.

"Just leave me a flyer / put it in the letterbox / send info"

Yeah fair enough makes sense why you'd want a flyer — and honestly, if it was just flyer-worth of info I'd hand it over and be on my way. (obvious) Thing is, the numbers are different for every house — your roof, your bill, your power use — so a flyer can't really tell you what you'd actually qualify for. That's why we get a specialist to walk you through it properly. (reasonable, casual)

No pressure though, man. Worst case you get a bit more clarity on your situation, best case we save you thousands of bucks. Everyone around here's been doing it — we just helped out [NEIGHBOUR] like I mentioned. Probably wouldn't be the worst use of your time, but again, completely up to you. (casual)

→ Then return to executing the script.

"I'm not really interested / we don't need this"

Almost always means I'm not convinced this is worth my time yet. Don't take it at face value.

"Yeah totally fair. From what [NEIGHBOUR] told me, the bills around here have been climbing pretty hard — has yours been creeping up too? (curious) (let them answer) What are you getting stung for at the moment, just off the top of your head? (curious)"

→ Then return to the qualify-on-bill section. Once they give you a number, you're back on script.

"I need to think about it / talk to my partner"

100% — and that's honestly why we don't make any decisions or anything crazy on the door. (obvious) The walkthrough is for both of you to literally sit down together with a specialist, see the numbers, and decide as a household. (reasonable, casual) Does that make sense? (curious)

→ Then return to the closing funnel — you're actually selling them on why the walkthrough exists with this objection, so it leads naturally back into booking.

"We can't afford it right now"

Yeah totally fair — and honestly that's the most common thing I hear, which is exactly why this thing exists. (casual, reasonable) There's no upfront cost — as long as you qualify, the repayments end up less than what you're already paying for power. So you're not adding a bill, you're just redirecting what you're already losing to the grid every month. (reasonable) Make sense? (curious)

→ Then return to executing the script.
