PILLAR 7

GUARANTEES & WARRANTIES

“Focus on what could break — and build so it can’t.”

— JEFF BEZOS

Cover every angle, or the price kills the close.

GUARANTEES & WARRANTIES

Pillar 7 of 12 • Presentation

THE GOAL

By the end of this pillar, the customer should think: “okay — if I go with these guys, there’s literally no scenario where I’m exposed. They’ve got every angle covered for 25 years.” The guarantees themselves do the heavy lifting — your job is to walk them confidently, frame the pillar as the biggest separator in the industry, and tie everything back to one anchor: this is why you can do this with no stress.

“If I go with these guys, there’s literally no scenario where I’m exposed. They’ve got every angle covered for 25 years.”

WHY IT MATTERS

- Pre-handles every “what if it breaks” objection. By the end of this pillar, the customer has heard six different protections — downtime, savings, monitoring, hail, optimisation, parts & labour. Every common worry is structurally handled before they raise it.
- Sets up the savings reveal. The 100% Savings Guarantee beat explicitly tells them: “the numbers we’re about to show you are legally guaranteed.” That framing makes Pillar 9 (Solar Savings Breakdown) land as fact, not projection.
- The biggest separator pillar. This is THE pillar that differentiates a premium installer from cheap competition. Walking it with full confidence is what justifies the price gap they’re about to see.

TONALITY (CRITICAL)

CONFIDENT, CALM, NO HYPE — JUST WALK THE FACTS

The guarantees are the real selling point. You don’t need to sell them — you just need to walk them properly. Customers who hear these guarantees walked confidently come away thinking: “these guys are clearly the only real option.”

- Confident, not boastful. Said like you’re reading off a list of facts the customer is lucky to be hearing. Not like you’re showing off.
- Calm pacing. Six guarantees. Don’t rush them. Each one deserves its own moment to land before moving to the next.

- Tie everything to no-stress. Every guarantee should land with the implicit message: “this is one more reason you can do this with zero stress.” That’s the through-line.

Scripting note

This pillar has 6 guarantees, each with its own beat. Most beats are dot-points + a key tie-back line. Three moments are fully scripted: (1) the pillar opener, (2) the 100% Savings Guarantee anchor, (3) the close. The guarantees themselves are listed in the order Jesse uses in real presentations — built to flow logically (Monitoring sets up Downtime → Downtime sets up Savings → Savings ties to Optimisation).

TRANSITION FROM PILLAR 6

Pillar 6 closed with the customer confirming the design and the rep delivering the close-out: “that’s all good, let’s jump into the warranties, which is the most important stuff.” That “most important stuff” framing is the prime — they’re leaning in.

Open Pillar 7 immediately after the design close-out. No additional verbal switch needed — the prime from Pillar 6 carries the energy.

PILLAR OPENER (FULLY SCRIPTED)

This is the framing moment that sets up the entire pillar. The customer needs to understand BEFORE you walk the guarantees that what they’re about to hear is the biggest separator in the industry — not just a feature list.

The opening frame

Open with weight. Tell them upfront: this is the pillar that matters most, this is why people can do this with zero stress, this is what separates real installers from cheap ones.

“Alright guys — these are the warranties. These are actually pretty important, so you should listen in here.”

Tonality: calm + certainty. Said like you’re flagging that what comes next matters. Slight shift in pace — slow down a touch on “actually pretty important.”

“By the way, all of these are exclusive for 25 years. This is literally the biggest thing that separates us from every other company out there. This is the reason people can do this with absolutely no stress at all — knowing that no matter what happens, we’ve got them covered.”

Tonality: certainty + genuine. Said with full conviction. The “no stress” line is the through-line of the entire pillar — it gets repeated implicitly with every guarantee.

The walk-through setup

Set the expectation that you’re going to walk through each one — and that questions are welcome. This builds trust and pre-empts the rep racing through the pillar.

“I’m going to go through each of these one by one. If you have any questions at all, please ask me — I want to make sure you really clearly understand each one, because this is what’s going to be protecting you for the next 25 years.”

Tonality: genuine. Said like you actually want them to ask questions — because you do. Customers who ask questions during this pillar lock in faster.

GUARANTEE 1: ACTIVE MONITORING SERVICE

Open with this one because it sets up the Downtime Guarantee that follows. The logic flows: “we constantly monitor → we know before you do → so when something does go wrong, the SLA timer starts the second we detect it, not when you eventually notice.”

Beat 1: Read the guarantee

Read the guarantee as it appears on the slide — let the words land first.

“Alright, the first one — Active Monitoring Service. We constantly monitor your system. Our team can check performance and fault status at any time. If something’s wrong, we’ll often know before you do, and we’re out to fix it before it costs you money.”

Tonality: calm + matter-of-fact. Read it cleanly off the slide. Don’t embellish.

Beat 2: Simplify it for them

Now simplify it. Hit it again in your own words so it’s dead easy to understand. The customer hears the guarantee twice — once how it’s written, once how a mate would explain it.

“Basically, to put it cleanly — we’ll know before you if there’s ever anything that happens with your system. Any issue, any fluctuation, anything that drops off the baseline — we’ll know immediately.”

Tonality: casual confidence. Said like a friend explaining something — not a salesperson reading a brochure.

Beat 3: Reinforce with whatever your company has

Pick whichever points apply to your installer and weave them in. The goal is to land the no-surprises message: there’s no scenario where you wake up 6 months from now and realise the system’s been off and you’ve got a massive bill. Don’t sell it hard — just let the customer know the operational backing is there.

Possible angles to include (use whichever apply):

- “You also get your own app to monitor it from your end whenever you want”
- “By the way guys — we have the dashboard on our end watching the back of it”
- “There simply aren’t many other companies that have branded vehicles ready to come out at any point”
- “We’ve got electricians on hand ready to respond whenever something pings”
- “There’s a separate dedicated team that comes out — not whoever’s free, an actual response team”
- “There’s no situation where you wake up 6 months from now realising the system’s been off and you’ve got a massive bill — we’ll have caught it the same week”

Tonality: calm + matter-of-fact. Pick 2–3 of these that genuinely apply to your installer. Don’t list all of them — that’s overselling. The no-surprises framing is the through-line.

GUARANTEE 2: [X]-DAY DOWNTIME GUARANTEE (SLA)

This is the cash-in on the monitoring setup. The SLA is one of the strongest beats in the whole pillar — “if we can’t fix it within X days, we pay you for the lost savings.” Almost no other company offers this. Let it land.

Beat 1: Read the guarantee

Read it directly. The wording does the work — it’s a hard commitment with a financial consequence.

“Next one — and this is a big one. The [X]-Day Downtime Guarantee. If your solar system has a fault, we’ll be out to diagnose it immediately and have it fixed within a maximum of [X] business days. If we can’t — we cover every dollar of savings you lose until it’s back online.”

Tonality: certainty. Said with full conviction. Slow down on the last sentence — “we cover every dollar of savings you lose until it’s back online.” Let it land.

Replace [X] with your installer’s actual SLA window — typically 7, 10, or 14 business days. If you don’t have a published SLA, this is a deal-breaker — you need one before delivering this pillar.

Beat 2: Why this matters

Explain why an SLA matters — most customers haven’t thought about what happens when their system breaks. Frame it as the difference between doing solar right vs paying twice.

- “There’s no point doing solar if it’s going to go down every couple of years and you’re left chasing someone to fix it”
- “You want to do this once — for 25 years it’s up and running, you’re saving every single month”
- “This guarantee makes sure that even in the worst-case scenario, you’re still saving — because we’re paying you what your system would have produced”

Tonality: matter-of-fact + certainty. The logic is airtight — let the customer follow it.

Beat 3: The industry contrast (soft)

Brief contrast with what cheap companies do — without naming names or going into a long story. Just plant the seed.

“And honestly — most other companies have nothing in place for this. If something goes wrong, you’re on your own. ‘Bad luck, mate’ is pretty much how it goes. That’s why we put everything in place to make sure you’re never in that position.”

Tonality: matter-of-fact, slight knowing tone. Don’t overplay the contrast — said as a flat industry observation, not as an attack on competitors.

GUARANTEE 3: 100% SAVINGS GUARANTEE

This is the philosophical anchor of the entire pillar AND the explicit setup for Pillar 9 (Solar Savings Breakdown). Tells the customer: “the numbers we’re about to show you are legally guaranteed.” Fully scripted.

Beat 1: Open the guarantee

Frame this one as the biggest of the six. Read the guarantee, then explicitly tie it to the savings reveal that's coming next.

"This next one — this is probably the biggest one. The 100% Savings Guarantee. Your panels are guaranteed to maintain their exact rated output for the next 25 years. If they ever fall below that, we immediately take over and cover 100% of any savings you lose while we're resolving the situation."

Tonality: certainty + genuine. Said with weight — this IS the biggest one. Don't rush.

Beat 2: The setup for Pillar 9 (fully scripted)

This is the critical anchor. Tells the customer that the savings numbers they're about to see are not projections — they're legally guaranteed. This makes Pillar 9 land as fact.

"Why this matters — in a second, we're about to jump into the exact numbers and show you exactly how much your system is going to save you off your bill, and exactly how much it's going to produce every single year. This is based off the exact output of your panels, which — like we just said — is 100% guaranteed."

"What that means is — you're not going to get a scenario where we show you a system, and 6 months down the track it's doing nothing like that, and we go 'too bad, so sad.' That just can't happen with us. If our system doesn't deliver the results we said it will, we have to pay you the difference. Simple as that."

Tonality: certainty throughout. Said like a fact, not a sales line. The "too bad, so sad" line is delivered with a slight knowing chuckle — the customer recognises that scenario from other industries.

Beat 3: The pre-handle on "wipe out your bill" claims

Pre-handle the customer's skepticism about big savings claims. Almost every customer has been pitched solar before — they've heard the "we'll wipe out your bill" pitch and been burned. Acknowledge that pattern and differentiate.

"It protects you so you don't get someone who said 'yeah, we'll wipe out your bill' — and then you get a bill, and you're like 'mate, you just lied to me.' That just can't happen with us — because we have a 100% guarantee. If we don't deliver, we pay the difference."

Tonality: matter-of-fact + slight knowing tone. The "mate you just lied to me" line is the customer's voice — the rep is voicing what the customer would say if they got burned. Lands with humour and recognition.

Beat 4: The honest disclaimer (critical)

This beat protects you legally AND builds trust. Customers sometimes hear "100% guaranteed" and mentally translate that to "I will never see a power bill again." That's not what the guarantee says, and you can't let them walk out thinking it. The honest disclaimer here both prevents future disputes and reinforces your credibility — honest sellers stand out.

"Okay, by the way guys — just to be really clear with you. We're not saying you're never going to get another power bill again, ever, in your life. That would be crazy — and no one can guarantee that, of course. What we ARE guaranteeing though, is that the numbers we're about to show you are 100% accurate and based on your system performing exactly how we said it will. That part is locked in. Alright — is that all clear?”

Tonality: genuine + sincere. Said with a slight pause before — like you're flagging something important you don't want them to misunderstand. The honesty is the selling point.

The check-in at the end (“is that all clear?”) gets explicit confirmation that they understand what is and isn't being promised. Wait for the yes before moving on. That yes is your legal protection AND a trust-building micro-commitment.

Optional light joke after they say yes (only if the rapport is there): something like “Awesome, awesome — we just don't want to have crazy customers holding a gun to our head in the future.” Read the room and keep it natural. Then frame back to genuine: “but yeah, we're genuinely here to help — we just want to make sure you're not getting lied to like these other companies do.” The joke + reframe combo lands the honesty as warm rather than cold.

Don't skip this. Customers who walk away thinking they were promised a $0 bill come back angry. Customers who walk away knowing exactly what was guaranteed stay loyal for 25 years.

GUARANTEE 4: HAIL DAMAGE COVER

Quick beat. Hail was already covered briefly in Pillar 5 (the cricket-ball question). The customer already knows what hail is — don't labour the explanation. One simple line, move on.

Beat 1: One-line reassurance

“Next one — Hail Damage Cover. As I mentioned earlier, guys, if you ever get a hail storm come through, no stress on your end. Even if it absolutely obliterates your panels, there'll be nothing out of pocket for you. So no stress at all.”

Tonality: calm + casual confidence. Said briefly — quick and clean, then move straight on. The recurring-theme tieback comes later, after Parts and Labour Cover (Guarantee 6).

GUARANTEE 5: ONGOING SAVINGS OPTIMISATION

This is the long-term optimisation guarantee — keep them on the best retailer, flag opportunities, make sure they're always making the most money. Light beat. Don't overcook it.

Beat 1: Read the guarantee

Read the guarantee — it's the most action-oriented of the six.

“Ongoing Savings Optimisation. We keep optimising your savings long after install — moving you to the energy retailer paying the highest feed-in tariff, adjusting your setup as prices shift, and making sure you're always profiting the most from your system.”

Tonality: calm + matter-of-fact. Read it cleanly.

Beat 2: Simplify it for them

Simplify it. Strip the policy language and say what it actually means for them in practice.

“What this pretty much means is — we keep optimising your savings long after install. More or less, just moving you to the energy retailer that's going to pay you the most and let you make the most money. Always.”

“We’ll always give you our recommendations to keep you in the loop, because we’ve got all the analytics and data on our side. If something comes up where you could make a bit of extra cash, we’ll move you over there.”

Tonality: casual confidence. Said like a friend tipping you off — “hey, we’re watching the market for you.”

Beat 3: The live example (optional)

If you’ve got a current opportunity to show, this is where you show it. The customer seeing a real, live example anchors the guarantee in something tangible — not just a promise.

- Pull up a current example of a retailer or product that’s paying above-market
- Show them the actual numbers — “this is what you could be making with this setup”
- Frame it: “this is exactly the kind of thing we keep an eye on for you”

AU example: log into Amber Electric and show them the wholesale-pricing model — customers can sell power back to the grid at peak prices and make significantly more than standard feed-in tariffs. Shows the upside is real, not theoretical.

Other countries: substitute whatever the local equivalent is — community solar programs, virtual power plant memberships, dynamic-pricing retailers, etc. The point is to have ONE concrete live example loaded that demonstrates the optimisation isn’t hypothetical.

Tonality: genuine + casual confidence. Don’t pitch the example — just show it briefly and move on. The fact you’ve got a real example loaded is the proof.

GUARANTEE 6: PARTS AND LABOUR COVER

Last guarantee. Quick, clean, no embellishment. Parts and labour is the “obviously, but worth saying” guarantee — most customers assume it’s included until they read other companies’ fine print and find it isn’t.

Beat 1: Read and explain

Read the guarantee, then call out what it actually means.

“Last one — Parts and Labour Cover. If anything goes wrong with your installation, we replace every part and cover every hour of labour. No callout fees, no invoices, no arguments. Our install, our responsibility.”

Tonality: certainty + matter-of-fact. Read it clean.

Beat 2: The cheap-company contrast (soft)

Brief contrast with what most companies actually do — charge for callouts, charge for labour, before you know it the customer is out of pocket hundreds for a warranty claim.

- “Most companies, even if you’re lucky, will only cover part of it — they’ll charge a callout fee, labour fee, before you know it you’re paying $500+ just for someone to come out”
- “With us, even a small part that costs a couple hundred bucks — we cover it, no questions”

- “And that’s really the point — if we’re using crap in your system, we’re shooting ourselves in the foot. So we use the best gear from day one, and you’re fully covered no matter what”

Tonality: certainty + casual confidence. The “shooting ourselves in the foot” line is the lock-in — it tells the customer the guarantee is structurally aligned with the company’s incentives, not a marketing claim.

Beat 3: The recurring theme tieback

Now that all six guarantees have been walked, name the pattern. This is the moment the customer realises the guarantees aren’t a feature list — they’re a system of protection. The repetition across all six is the point.

- “You can probably start to see the recurring theme here, guys — no matter what happens, we put you first and cover it”
- “That’s really what all six of these add up to — there’s no scenario where you’re left holding the bag”

Tonality: certainty + genuine. Said with weight — this is the moment that crystallises the whole pillar. Slow down on the “recurring theme” line; let the customer feel the pattern.

THE 25-YEAR LOCK-IN + RESALE ANCHOR

After all six guarantees are walked, hammer the 25-year coverage one more time and pre-handle the “what if we move” objection. Most customers haven’t considered that the warranties transfer with the home — when they realise it adds resale value, the long-term commitment feels even more obvious.

Beat 1: Hammer the 25-year coverage

Reinforce that ALL six guarantees apply for the full 25 years — not just for a couple of years, not just until the install is done.

“And remember guys — all six of these are for the FULL 25 years. Not for a couple of years, not until install — for the full 25. Combined with the panels themselves still operating at almost 89% after 25 years, you’re fully covered, top to bottom, for the long haul.”

Tonality: certainty + genuine. Said with weight — this is the closing of the guarantees walk-through. Slow down on “the full 25 years.”

Beat 2: The resale pre-handle

Pre-handle “but what if we move?” before they raise it. The warranties transferring is a positive — it adds resale value.

- “Now what happens if you guys decide to move in 5, 10, 15 years?”
- “You’ve actually just increased the value of your property significantly”
- “The new homeowner gets to move into a home where they’re protected for the next 20 years — they become part of the family straight away”
- “And on your end, the increased property value more than covers paying out the system — no early exit fees, no hidden costs on the green loan”

Tonality: matter-of-fact. Said like the answer to a totally normal question — because it is. This pre-handle stops the resale objection from ever surfacing later.

THE CHECK-IN CLOSE (FULLY SCRIPTED)

Light close after walking all six guarantees. Two-step check-in: questions first, then how-do-they-sound. The two-step structure makes it harder for the customer to glide past — they have to actively confirm twice.

“Okay, well — that’s all six guarantees right there, guys. Do you have any questions about any of them?”

Tonality: casual + genuine. Asked lightly. At this point in the presentation, the trust is fully built — most customers say “no, no, no.”

If they do raise a question, address it confidently using the relevant guarantee’s detail. Then loop back to the next question below.

Once they say no questions, follow up with the second check:

“Alright, well — how do they all sound?”

Tonality: casual + genuine. Almost everyone says “good” or “sounds great” at this stage. That confirmation is the unlock for Pillar 8.

Once they confirm, transition cleanly into Pillar 8:

“Perfect.”

Tonality: calm + casual confidence. One word, then move straight on. Don’t over-engineer the transition — “perfect” + the natural pivot into Pillar 8 is enough. The customer is fully bought in; just keep moving.

FAILURE MODES (DO NOT DO)

- Rushing through the six guarantees. This is the biggest separator pillar. If you race through it, you waste the strongest differentiator in the entire presentation. Each guarantee gets its own moment.
- Going into hype mode. The guarantees are powerful on their own. Selling them with energy or hype undermines them. Calm, confident, matter-of-fact delivery is what makes them land.
- Skipping the 100% Savings Guarantee setup for Pillar 9. The line “the numbers we’re about to show you are legally guaranteed” is what makes Pillar 9 land as fact instead of as a sales projection. Skipping it weakens both pillars.
- Skipping the honest disclaimer (Guarantee 3 Beat 4). Letting the customer walk away thinking “100% guaranteed” means “I’ll never see a bill again” creates angry customers down the line. The 30-second disclaimer protects you legally, builds genuine trust, and differentiates you from the cowboys who DO promise zero bills.
- Naming or attacking specific competitors. The industry contrast lines are flat observations — “most companies have nothing in place,” “bad luck mate is how it goes.” Don’t name names. Industry-level critique reads as factual; competitor-level critique reads as defensive.
- Skipping the resale pre-handle. If you don’t pre-handle “what if we move,” it surfaces later as a stall. Five extra sentences here saves a 5-minute objection later.
- Failing to tie back to “no stress.” Every guarantee should implicitly land with the through-line: “this is one more reason you can do this with zero stress.” Without the through-line, the pillar reads as a feature list instead of a peace-of-mind anchor.

TRANSITION INTO PILLAR 8 (POWER BILL PAIN)

Pillar 7 closes with the customer fully covered for 25 years and the rep delivering: “last thing before we jump into the numbers, let’s take a proper look at your bill.” That framing primes Pillar 8 — the bill walk-through, this time looking at COSTS (not just usage like in Pillar 6 Slide 3). The customer is fully bought into the company, fully covered, and now ready to confront what they’re currently paying.

No additional verbal switch needed — the close-out from the check-in IS the transition into Pillar 8.

Remember: this pillar is the biggest separator. Every guarantee walked properly is one more reason they can do this with zero stress — and one more reason the price gap is obvious.
